Kitchen nightmares season 4 episode 13 zeke s

In this episode of Kitchen Nightmares, chef Gordon Ramsay visits Zeke in Metieri, Louisiana. Zeke was originally owned by a local icon named James Flynn aka Zeke who died in Hurricane Katrina. The Cageonese restaurant was purchased by Darryl and Alan Cortello in 2006 at a real estate sale. They fired the staff, raised prices but lowered portion sizes and food quality. Gordon visits locals before the restaurant and they say they stopped walking because of it. Gordon arrives during lunch, is greeted by Alan and orders food. He was told the menu remained the same as that of the previous owner with some extras from Daryl. Gordon orders cortello oysters, boiled shrimp, fried chicken steak and bread pudding. He's not impressed with the food especially soft shrimp, shrimp he discovers frozen. The oysters aren't good and the dish is depressing and the fried chicken stik is bland without labelling. However, he is impressed by the taste of the bread pudding, made by chef Emile even though the presentation won't look good. Gordon walks into the kitchen to discuss the shortage of fresh shrimp and tells them the food was of a low standard. Darryl claims he doesn't have time to buy it from the fish market and it was his decision to use low-quality cuts of meat. Darryl claims Gordon doesn't know anything about food in New Orleans because he didn't give him back food. Gordon talks to Emile and another cook who tells him the owner only cares about money and cut corners to cut costs. At dinner Gordon discovers that the shrimp is packed into dishes and he is not impressed. The food is not a hit with customers, it is cold from sitting on the aisle and the lasagna they are served was made a week ago. Gordon informs the dining room that he was done a week ago and the customers are leaving the restaurant. The owners still don't see any problems and can't see where they're wrong as they are in denial. Chef Ramsay summons a staff meeting the next morning and encourages them to express their opinions to Alan and Daryl. Jason tells them they're more concerned with customer numbers than quality food, customer service, staff refreshments and paying decent wages. Ellen defends it by saying they had to use their finances to pay the wages and Darryl angrily tells them if you don't want to be here, don't be here. Gordon poses a challenge for chefs to go to the grocery store and return with ingredients to cook a seafood dish. They prepare two well-presented dishes, salmon, grits and red fish with grilled vegetables. Gordon serves them to Alan and Daryl, they love the dishes and Gordon discovers they were made by Emile and Jason rather than himself. Overnight, the restaurant with a redesigned menu is filled with fresh shellfish and alligator. On the night of the relaunch, some locals are present. Gordon encourages the servers to push the buckets of seafood and Daryl is speeding up. The kitchen starts to fall apart when he reads a lot of cards together and shows that he Focus only on getting the tools out quickly. Gordon tells them to focus on one dose at a time and communicate better. The relaunch is becoming a success and customers love the food and a local news channel is coming to cover the relaunch. What happened after that at Zeke's? Over the next few weeks, the number of customers increased and morale improved. The restaurant is still open, Yelp reviews were mostly positive after Gordon visited with compliments for food and service. The average notes criticise portion sizes and suggest the service could be compromised and missed. They hired new executive chef Michelle Matlock, who had a lot of experience and some vegan specials for the menu. Zeke closed in October 2012 and was sold to a new owner. A sign stating the closure was taped to the restaurant door. Darryl and Alan own LUCA Eats in New Orleans and the presties are excellent. Porter and Luke opened in the former Zeke in January 2013 and guests are good. Zeke aired on May 13, 2011, the episode was filmed in January 2011 and is a nightmare kitchen season 4 episode 11. A lawsuit in September 2007 was filed by Martin Hyde, Dillon's former general manager, against Ramsey for allegedly staged disasters and hired actors to outsmart the audience. [22] The case was closed and entered arbitration. [23] Gordon Ramsay's 2010 reception from The New York Times's Ginia Belfente found Ramsay's teaching methods and high standards unmistanitably mesmerizing and responded that the thrill of watching Mr. Ramsey is witnessing someone so at heart with his arrogance. Doug Elfman of the Chicago Sun-Times said the show is a very entertaining public service that makes you laugh, make you sick and makes you think. Randy Cordova of the Arizona Republic found Ramsay a plumber and dirty here just like he is in Hell's Kitchen. But he's also strangely endearing, mainly because he really seems invested in the fate of every restaurant. Critics commented that Fox's adaptation of Kitchen Nightmares erred from the strengths of the original Channel 4 series. Maureen Ryan of the Chicago Tribune said: Leave it to Fox to take something the British have done pretty well and dirty it up. She added, Note the cooking; This edition of the show seems more interested in playing the family dramas at the restaurants Ramsey visits. Robert Lloyd of the Los Angeles Times commented: While the nightmares in British Ramsay's kitchen are at the forging of a food show - it has interesting things to show them how a restaurant operates and a kitchen works, the wonders of local markets and what can be made of them if you're Gordon Ramsay or willing to follow his instructions - the Fox edition highlights a glitch, an argument and an emotional breakdown almost to the gist of the kitchen.
